

Collection of Poems

By: Seanjiev V. Gallardo

“Possession”

Nana used to say,
If you stare at a mirror
For a long time, it will
Steal your face and voice,

So when you are gone,
The mirror will use them
To sing quietly to your Loved ones.

Even now, her voice
Still echoes; her smile
Is still soft and warm,
When I look at her old mirror.

"Hairfall"

Monks stay bald
Because they burned
The hair they shaved

My sister once trimmed
Her bangs, so she turned
Into a pencil

My brother kept
His hair long to Grow his muscles

And when father let
Me pluck his gray hair,
They multiplied the next day

Sometimes, when I
Look at my oncologist,

I think of the hair
I burned years ago

"Instructions"

The spell is simple

Toss a coin into the well,
Clap your hands thrice,
Guess the name of the spirit

If you do it right,
It will grant your wish

If not,
You will know
It listened

"a moment with mr. cat"

The white cat often
Stares at the white wall

When we stop talking,
It turns around and
Faces the wall silently

Sometimes, I sit
Beside it and pretend
To look at the things
Only it can see

"Boundaries"

In the old days,
Dwarves were vicious

If you piss on
Their houses, your balls would Grow twice

Instantly

Now, they turn soft
And forget it,
As long as you apologize
And excuse yourself

Once, I thought of
Skipping an apology

But I didn't have balls

To do it

Copyright © 2026. Seanjiev Gallardo. All
Rights Reserved.